Past Conference Report

A registered nurse (RN) is a nurse who graduated from a nursing program and met a nation, state, province or similar authorizing body's preconditions for obtaining a nursing license. Registered nurses are working in a wide range of environments with professionals and are often trained in an area of study. They might be liable for managing care conveyed by other healthcare workers, including student nurses, licensed practical nurses (with the exception of in Canada), unlicensed assistive faculty, and less-experienced RNs. Registered nurses should normally meet a minimum practice hour's requirement and attempt proceeding with instruction to keep up their permit. Besides, there is regularly a prerequisite that a RN remain free from serious criminal convictions.
